

Fresh bargains were sparse in February

Glancing up and down the lowest-price columns of all three of the tables below, it is clear that there were few fresh bargains for independent pharmacists and dispensing doctors in February. For many of the products listed, especially in Figure 1, there were no changes at all in their lowest prices compared with a month earlier.

One of the exceptions was four-tablet packs of alendronate 70mg, whose falling prices indicate both excess capacity in the market and a commodity status. Similar falls of 19% in the average price and 14% in the lowest price reflect a general price movement downwards by all of the generics players in this market.

At just £0.51 (US$0.73) on average, alendronate 70mg could be bought in the trade for £1.00 a pack below the reimbursement price in the Drug Tariff of £1.60. This gave pharmacists a 68% profit margin on the drug. Compared with Merck Sharp & Dohme's Fosamax brand price of £22.80, however, the average generic discount was 98%.

But at least one supplier was asking only £0.24 for a once-weekly alendronate pack. That represented an 85% profit margin for pharmacists based on the reimbursement price and a staggering 99% discount on the brand price. The day cannot be far away in the UK when some generics suppliers are offering alendronate for free on orders for more profitable lines.

Ondansetron, by contrast, still has a long way to go before it becomes a commodity. Nevertheless, the prices of both strengths lost ground last month, as they also did for sumatriptan 50mg and 100mg (see Figures 1 and 2). Meanwhile, nearly all the healthy price rises in the UK market were from very low bases (see Figure 3). G
