

Year ends with relatively stable prices

The year ended quietly with December prices in the UK market remaining broadly in line with November's. Dramatic price changes were few and far between, although at least one supplier of lansoprazole capsules had some stock it wanted to move quickly.

Offers to independent pharmacists and dispensing doctors of £0.50 (US$0.99) for 28-capsule packs of lansoprazole 15mg, and £1.00 for the 30mg strength, both represented price cuts of more than a third compared with the lowest prices in November (see Figure 1). Meanwhile, however, average lansoprazole prices barely moved, indicating only a single player was cutting its prices.

Sumatriptan showed the opposite effect. November's lowest price offers were withdrawn, but nonetheless average prices fell by more than a fifth. Six-tablet packs of sumatriptan 100mg cost 24% less at £2.23 on average in December, but the lowest price available increased by 27% to £1.26 (see Figure 2).

One product that experienced a general upward price movement in December was atenolol. Average price rises of about a fifth mirrored similar increases in lowest prices, with 28-tablet packs of atenolol 50mg experiencing an average price increase of 19% while the lowest price went up by 29% (see Figure 3). But when the original price was just £0.07 – exactly 0.25 pence per tablet – a rise of a few pence is substantial in percentage terms. G
